Checklist of Southern Periodicals
Section I — Titles arranged alphabetically	17
Section II — Titles arranged by States	67
Section III — Titles arranged chronologically	103

Introduction

The following checklist attempts to give the titles of periodicals published in the sixteen Southern states — Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia, and the District of Columbia — from their beginnings, as here reported, in 1764 to 1861. The titles are given with (1) place of imprint, (2) periodicity, and (3) dates of first and last issues when files could be located to determine these facts. Bibliographical details of pagination and illustration are not recorded. Only the most important title variations are given.

The ultimate objective for which this checklist has been in preparation for several years is a history of Southern literary magazines. But during the investigation which has gone forward with uneven intensity, numerous requests by researchers, by historical societies, and by librarians, have been made for all or part of the checklist and collations here reported; therefore it seems desirable to report the findings up to date.

In the classification of material, the term periodical or magazine has been applied in the main to subject matter rather than format, periodicity, or other devices. Since the period was not one of specialization in publications, the specific periodical all too frequently offered a particular question. Possibly the most exacting problem in classification was the weekly which I included if its contents took on the nature of a magazine. However, for some users of the checklist the newspaper-magazine may not mark such a wide diversion from the connotation as the essay-periodical or essay-journal-magazine which is probably best represented here by Vigil and Trateur of Charleston, S. C. In order to meet the demands of their readers, the editors apparently tried to make their magazines eclectic and encyclopedic. One of the earliest with a title suggesting this diversity was —General Magazine and Impartial Review, Baltimore, Md.

Frances Trollope (1780–1863) in Domestic Manners of the Americans (Vol. 1, pp. 128–129, Dodd, Mead, and Co., 1904) wrote: "The fact is, that throughout all ranks of society, from the successful merchant, which is the highest, to the domestic serving man, which is the lowest, they are all too actively employed to read, except at such broken moments as may suffice for a peep at a newspaper. It is for this reason, I presume, that every American newspaper is more or less a magazine, wherein the merchant may scan, while he holds out his hand for an invoice, 'Stanzas by Mrs. Hemans', or a garbled extract from Moore's Life of Byron; the lawyer may study his brief faithfully, and yet contrive to pick up the valuable dictum of some American critic, that 'Bulwer's novels are decidedly superior to Sir Walter Scott's' ".

In spite of Mrs. Trollope's opinion that every newspaper was more or less a magazine, the following exclusions have been made: newspapers, annuals, almanacs, gift books, law reports and digests, alumni and undergraduate publications, administrative and legislative serials.

Several magazine titles are included in the checklist, although copies could not be located, for the critical comments or the prospectuses in contemporaries gave indubitable evidence of their existence and nature. Among the elusive were —Quiver, Texian Monthly, Georgia Gazette, Mountain Cone Journal, and Tramontane Magazine.

With the project at its present stage of development, it is rather difficult to draw many conclusions. But apparently the periodical in the South, as elsewhere, may be regarded as a chart recording regularly and frequently the interests of the average educated intelligence of its readers, and reflecting their varying tastes and opinions. In addition there emerges in the study the fact that in the periodicals are first seen the changes that mark the progressive steps in the literature of the South.

In the excerpts from salutatory comments and prospectuses there is evident a spirited sectional pride and earnest desire to give Southern writers a medium for publication and thereby further Southern literature. A discussion of the extent to which the early literary magazine encouraged and in some instances provided Southern writers with a medium for publication has been reserved for a separate study. Certainly the Southern ante bellum magazine, although conducted sometimes in a spirit of immoderate local pride, must have done much for the expansion of a national literature. It is obvious that these numerous ventures cannot be disregarded in the literary and social development of the South.

By the act of 1793 the government began to encourage magazines and newspapers by reducing postage. As there were no copyright laws, much of the miscellaneous material was copied from British into Northern, and from Northern into Southern periodicals. Many of the contributions were made by a local literary coterie, and occasionally the editor had to write all that he did not get by pirating. The South was sparsely settled without the urban contacts conducive to literary discrimination; therefore the early literary magazines ran a brief and uncertain course.

Of the seven hundred and fifty-seven periodicals listed in this checklist only a hundred continued after the beginning of the Civil War. Of this number fourteen expired between 1861 and 1865. Thirty-four of the hundred are still being published today. Twenty-two of the thirty-four are religious, four technical, and three agricultural. Not one of the Southern ante bellum literary magazines has continued to the present time. Sixteen of the entire list started in the eighteenth century. Beginning with the nineteenth century for six decades there was a decided increase: from 1800–1810, 26; 1810–1820, 44; 1820–1830, 88; 1830–1840, 138; 1840–1850, 193; 1850–1860, 232; and in 1860 alone there were 20 which started publication. The chief centers of production were — Baltimore, Washington, Nashville, Richmond, Charleston, Louisville, New Orleans, Lexington, and Atlanta.

Although most of the Southern periodicals of the ante bellum period did not pay, they rendered a distinct service. Futile as the early experiments seemed, and slight as was their reward, for there was the frequent contrasting of Northern successes as judged by subscription lists, their files are repositories for the study of Southern civilization.

The original element in this checklist consists in the re-discovery of certain titles hitherto overlooked or neglected. The discovery has usually come about, if not by accident, yet incidentally, and frequently in an advertisement of a prospectus. As often as not the prospectus might prove to be a premature announcement of a hope not realized. On the other hand, through corroborative evidence, several genuinely new titles have thus been established.
